Although I have worked as a carpenter, a teacher, and a computer engineer, I have always done photography. At Beloit College I majored in Art, with a heavy concentration in photography, which led to my carpentry career. While working as an engineer I spent weekends photographing stock cars and demolition derbies at speedways throughout New England. After retiring, I started going to Maine Media Workshops which served as a springboard for an MFA in photography from Lesley University.
I live with my wife Cindy in Scituate, RI, close to our grandchildren, beholden to acres of woodland that need constant attention.
